26 ASDAL CANDIDATE BIOS

Kudos, ASDAL Executive Officers and Members! We have reached and conquered numerous trials and challenges in keeping this association alive even during the rough time of the COVID-19 global pandemic.

It is my sheer honor and impeccable delight to know that ASDAL (Association of Seventh-day Adventist Librarians) has made its journey within forty-four years to excellent service, achieving the milestone of development and expansion of different regional chapters even amid incredibly tough times of pandemic, and dearth of people volunteering to lead the association but our innate bond of friendship, Christian fellowship, professional camaraderie, our spirit of compassion, cooperation and unity continue to persist to shine. That sincerely defines our identity as SDA librarians.

It was certainly as the COVID-19 global pandemic and now Pertussis abruptly evolved and undeniably affected our institutions, our family, especially our workforces and services. Hence, our commitment and determination to serve our institutions and clients are rewarding. As we tread to our next level of service pursuit against all odds, I believe that our Gracious God will continue to inspire our minds, hearts, and souls as we press for higher aspirations in life, and commitment to serve.

ASDAL, aim high, Achieve more. Always give your best. Be the pride of our institution, our people, our community, and our country because I still believe that “we” will be great because our contribution to the use of knowledge, attitudes, competency, and skills can contribute to the progress and development of our nation.

You may think that we are only ordinary people, but I firmly believe that we can do extraordinary things with “Christ who strengthens” us.

It is high time that we SDA librarians of the 21st century be the instrument of uplifting the quality of library service to our constituents. Be the agent of change and make a difference. Let us make it happen.

Move forward, be the light, and shine on ASDAL members around the globe!

PETERSON MEMORIAL LIBRARY HOSTS “WOMEN IN SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST HISTORY: A SPECIAL EXHIBIT OF PRIMARY RESOURCES”

By Carolyn Gaskell

During Black History and Women’s History months, Walla Walla University’s Peterson Memorial Library was privileged to host a special exhibit provided by the Archives, Statistics, & Research department of the North American Division of Seventh-day Adventists. The amazing primary resources in this collection showcase the accomplishments of women who were educators, geographers, poets, Millerite preachers, missionaries, and writers.

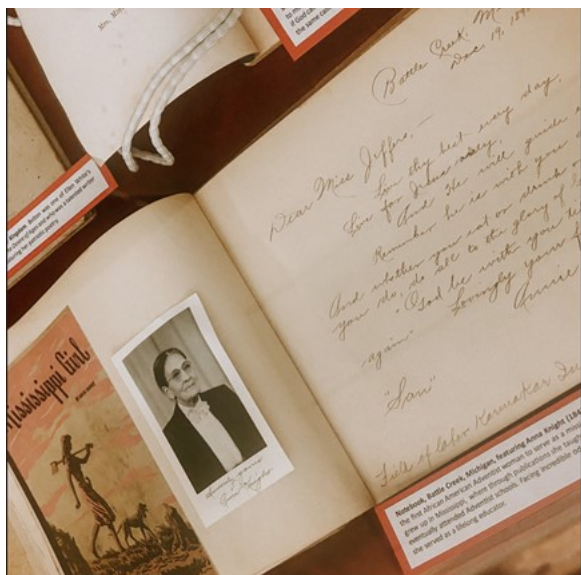

The exhibit was located in one of the library’s lobby display cases and was available for viewing from February through mid-April. During this time the university hosted two U-Days events during which academy seniors, juniors, and their sponsors and parents from around the region had a chance to see the exhibit.

One of the many exciting pieces in the collection is a notebook from Battle Creek which included handwritten notes by Anna Knight, whose autobiography is Mississippi Girl. Anna served as the first black woman missionary and was an incredible educator, ending her career at what is now Oakwood University.

Now! a very early work by Merikay McLeod Silver, tells the story of end time events from the perspective of a teenager. You may recall that in the 1970’s Merikay Silver had a significant impact how women were paid by church entities.

Another interesting book is Eliza H. Morton’s Geographical Spice: A Manual for Use of Teachers. Eliza and her various geography textbooks were well known at the turn of the 20th century.

The materials mentioned here are just a few of the twelve primary resources showcased in the display. Accompanying the materials was Michael's annotated list of titles which included information on why each work and author was important. That information was invaluable in creating the display signs for each item.

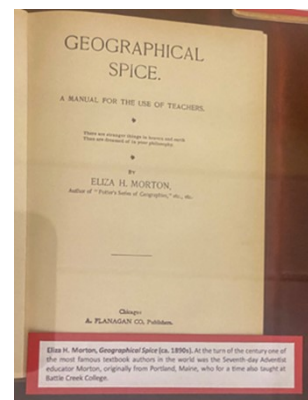

Just over a year ago an email on SDA-Librarian@andrews.edu caught my eye. Michael Campbell announced that his department was in the process of curating an exhibit on "the history of race, abolition, and early social activism." He envisioned that this exhibit would travel to interested SDA college and university libraries in North America. According to Michael's email, the reason for developing such a traveling exhibit was that "We would like to create greater historical awareness and would love to see if there is interest in a traveling exhibit that would be of minimal cost to travel to our college campuses." I contacted Michael and asked for additional information regarding the proposed exhibits and let him know we were interested in hosting one when available. In November of 2023, Michael inquired whether we could host an exhibit in February of 2024. The currently available exhibit was on women in Adventist history. We were interested and the timing was right for both of us. Since Michael was speaking locally in February, he personally brought the books with him and assisted in setting up the display.

It was a pleasure and an honor to be the first library to host this exhibit. We are so thankful to Michael Campbell and the Archives, Statistics, and Research department of the North American Division of Seventh-day Adventists for the opportunity of hosting these incredible materials. As we are in the process of returning the materials, the exhibit will soon be available to another library. If you are interested being a host, you may contact Michael at: MichaelCampbell@nadadventist.org.

OPEN EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES: INITIATIVES AT THE JAMES WHITE LIBRARY

By Margaret Adeogun

The James White Library received a one-year allocation of $25,000 on Friday, November 17, 2023, after participating in the pitch competition to raise funds for its Open Education Resources (OER) project. The funds will provide a stipend and professional development to faculty who wish to adopt, adapt, and create Open Educational Resources (OERs) to break down barriers of affordability and accessibility to expensive textbooks and build staff's capacity as they use and create OER resources.

Affordable alternatives to the high cost of textbooks and the need to expand educational opportunities through Open Educational Resources (OER) are significant measures in eliminating barriers to student success and improving enrollment and retention at Andrews University. In advancing global access to quality SDA higher education resources, expand the outreach of Adventist education, deepen students' education experience through customized educational resources, and encourage instructor experimentation and innovation in finding new, better, and lower-cost ways to deliver learning materials to their students through OER. Based on this objective, the James White Library (JWL) proposes an OER Grant Initiative to encourage, support, and incentivize OER adoption, adaptation, and creation. JWL will foster this initiative through small grants to participating instructors to support the creation and adoption of Open Education Resources for teaching and learning from an Adventist faith-based perspective. The grant covers three models:

- Adopt an existing open resource (open textbook and other OER course components such as homework assignments, lab manuals, or other supplementary materials). Grant allocation: $1000
- Adapt existing resources by mixing or revising open textbooks and other OER course components such as homework assignments, lab manuals, or other supplementary materials. Grant allocation: $1500
- Create a new open resource and other supplementary course materials (particularly for a course with an expensive textbook). Grant allocation: $2500

The financial implication of this initiative led the library to apply and participate in the pitch competition for funds from the AU Academic Partnership Grant, through which the library won a one-year allocation of $25,000 with a promise of additional funds in the following year. This fund will support the work of the recipients of the JWL OER Grants, workshops, Open Educational Resources membership, OER promotion, training of trainers, and other open access initiatives of the university.

JWL OER Grant Recipients

There are three recipients of the JWL OER grants:

Creation Grant

Dr. Max Keller—Head of the Department of Music

Dr. Keller will create an ear training textbook to support Aural Skills with Melodies, Rhythms, Intervals, Chords, and Harmonic Progressions Course (MUCT 154 – Ear Training Laboratory I – IV). Instead of incorporating only folk melodies to teach ear training, Dr. Keller will contain excerpts from the Adventist Hymnal to transform the curriculum into local content. He will receive a grant of $2500

Dr. Cristy Moss—MSMLS Program Director

Dr. Moss will create a Laboratory Information Management System (LIMS) software to support MLSC 350,451, and 452 courses in the Department of Laboratory Science. Laboratory Information Management System (LIMS) software is essential to medical laboratory education. Still, the commercially produced software's high cost and associated costs are prohibitive for many university-based MLS programs to purchase and integrate into their program, thus depriving the students of the enriching learning experience that the software provides. Dr. Moss plans to remove this economic barrier by creating an affordable, customizable, open, and equally effective LIMS that will promote students' full participation in the program, create inclusive access to quality learning tools, enhance students' intellectual and practical skills and prepare them for a successful career in laboratory science. This is a $2500 grant award.

Adapt Grant

Dr. Melissa Poua—Department of Medical Laboratory Science

Dr. Poua will adopt an Outbreak Virology Simulation Model that has been newly developed and mix it with a supplementary resource to support the course MLSC 432 (Specialized Clinical Microbiology). Her project will provide cheaper but equally effective ways to give medical laboratory students a better understanding of virology and foundational epidemiology. Creating an ancillary resource that will be openly licensed to support a newly developed simulation tool is a transformative use of a proprietary resource for learning enrichment at a low cost. The open resource will promote students' full participation in the course. This is a $1500 grant award.

This is the JWL's first attempt at using grants to promote learning. Congratulations to all grant recipients.

About the Academic Partnership Grant: The Andrews University Academic Partnership Grant is sponsored by the Office of the Provost. It supports new or emerging interdisciplinary collaborations to integrate and energize curricula. Its purpose is to foster creative thinking and planning to revitalize curricular ideas and strengthen existing programs through initiatives that enrich the academic community and enhance the student experience. The funds will help create space and time to encourage innovative collaboration across disciplines and levels. The Academic Partnership initiative offers two grants of $100,000 each for an interdisciplinary curricular initiative by Andrews University faculty, departments, schools, and colleges. Funding for the selected projects will be $100,000 to be budgeted over three years, with a $40,000 cap on spending the first year and $25,000 each successive year, with a $10,000 contingency fund. <https://www.andrews.edu/provost/academic-partnership-grant/index.html>.

At its maturity, we believe this initiative will save student costs, make learning more affordable, and increase enrollment and retention. An affordable learning solution bridges the economic barrier that has prevented many, particularly the Adventist constituency, from benefiting from HE. In the long run, this could expand the frontier of Adventist education.

Open Access Textbook Publishing

In addition to financing OER initiatives, part of the grant will support the publication of Open Access (AO) textbooks. The library recently partnered with the Office of Research and Scholarship to fund a request from the faculty to publish a textbook on OA outlet. This initiative to support opportunities in academic publishing will increase access and reduce student costs.

Congratulations, James White Library!

SMALL CHANGES GO FAR TO CREATE A SPACE OF INVITATION AT WALLA WALLA

By Douglas McClay

After the covid pandemic, the return of students to the campus and library space was a refreshing change from the isolation brought by remote learning. The return brought several changes to the Walla Walla University Portland campus library as a space for students. These changes were all accomplished with a minimum expense.

Previously the front of the library was occupied by computers and printers. As a result of the sudden move to online learning modality, there was a change of student computer use and printing needs. Students began having courses and exams online, and as such, they were required to have their own computers. The usage of library desktop computers trended downwards while the need for laptop space trended upwards on the return to in-person learning. In addition, the need for large amounts of printing for classes was replaced by uploading written work into the learning management platform. There was a desire expressed by students in having a welcoming entrance to the library space. The library computers were reduced by half, which freed up space to move comfy chairs from other parts of the library and a small coffee table. This coffee table was the only purchase in this small library refresh. Another chair, small end table, and lamp were all acquired from leftover furniture from dorm storage, with a picture brought from home to bring the entrance together and provide an invitation of welcome to the library entry.

A small chalkboard was added to the front entrance area for announcements and positive messages.

The lounge area of the library was upgraded by adding a discarded area rug that had been used in a classroom.

Small pocket study areas for one or two students to study were created. A small round table discarded by a retired faculty member was added for one of these small study areas. Another piece of furniture that was repurposed for a new home in the library.

Inspiration from another library led to a banner for coloring. Coloring is sometimes a therapeutic method of stress relief. A station for this was created with a discarded table and stools from the dorm kitchen. The stools and table only needed new rubber feet. The banner is marked for where each school year's groups of students stopped coloring and a new section is unrolled for the new cohort. In the end after it is completed, it will be displayed on the wall for art and students will be able to see what past classes had colored in.

We had a Keurig left over from former student association activities that was just sitting in a cupboard not being used. It was repurposed to be a library corner cafe. Portland's climate and weather for dreary overcast rainy days makes a warm drink a very welcome treat between classes.

With small changes, using items that have been discarded, and with only a small investment of funds, library areas can be improved to offer a welcoming atmosphere for your students. Look around and think creatively about how things can be rearranged or repurposed to create space in your own library where students feel invited.

FILM DIGITIZED TO CELEBRATE ANDREWS UNIVERSITY SESQUICENTENNIAL

By Katharine Van Arsdale

In 2024, Andrews University celebrates its 150th anniversary. Located in Berrien Springs, Michigan since 1901, the school began in 1874 in Battle Creek, where it was established as the first Seventh-day Adventist institution of higher education. To prepare for this year of sesquicentennial celebrations, the Center for Adventist Research (CAR) at the James White Library has partnered with the Adventist Digital Library (ADL) on a digitization program targeting unique historical records held in the archives. One focus has been a collection of over five hundred 16mm reel-to-reel films that document the school's history from the 1930s to the 1960s. The combined CAR-ADL team is nearly complete with the film phase of the digitization program.

Our project began with an unusual step. First, we had to acquire the right equipment, but we had no budget to purchase a ready-made 16mm film digitization unit. Luckily, two former members of our team, Brett Puckett and Eric Koester, had engineering and fabrication experience. They constructed a 16mm film digitization station using a combination of an Elmo 16CL Xenon Deluxe projector, a Blackmagic Design Pocket 4k camera, a 135mm Canon lens, and 3D printed parts to attach the pieces. In addition, they built a wooden table with tracks for the camera to slide along for focus adjustments.

Once the unit was assembled, trial and error brought further adjustments. We replaced the projector light with a brighter LED bulb, and the lens was removed so the film image would not spread on its way to the camera. An SSD drive was attached to the rig to capture the recordings. A flat screen monitor was also attached so the digitizer could review the film as it recorded. The film plays upside down as it records, so we simply flipped the monitor upside down on its stand to allow for a natural viewing experience.

After Eric and Brett completed the digitization station, other members of our team tackled the rest of the digitization workflow. The films were uncatalogued and undescribed, so we began with an inventory. During the inventory, we assigned unique numbers to each canister; these identifiers became our tracking numbers and file names. Using an Excel spreadsheet, we matched film identifiers with date, title, format, and condition metadata. Some film canisters contained useful metadata.

ta, but this was rare. Most description had to wait until the digitized film could be reviewed by first a student and then the ADL Digital Librarian, who enhanced and finalized the metadata for the Adventist Digital Library repository website, which uses Dublin Core. Each film also underwent quality checking and editing by our Digitization Center manager, Fabio Batista. Fabio reviewed for any mistakes in the recording process, such as speed or orientation.

The final step of our process involved upload to YouTube and the ADL website.

When we started in 2016, our repository website used Islandora, but by the time we reached the upload stage, we had migrated to Hyku, an open-source repository system by Samvera. The process of bulk upload to our Hyku repository was simple. Our first upload included eighty films that represent the rich variety found in the complete collection.

By January 2024, the first set of recordings from the Center for Adventist Research Film Collection were online and available in time to kick off Andrews University's 150th anniversary year. We've digitized all the reels and edited about half of them. We continue to finalize metadata and release files for upload to ADL. We look forward to sharing films with Andrews University and the broader Adventist community throughout the rest of this special anniversary year.

McKEE LIBRARY HOSTS JOHN GOULD'S ARTWORK

By Bethany Howard

McKee Library on the campus of Southern Adventist University has the honor of hosting the artwork of esteemed artist John Fleming Gould this semester. The collection spans the artist's lifetime, including early portrait sketches to vintage advertisements to paintings for the railroad industry. The artist John Fleming Gould was born in Worcester, MA and studied art at the Pratt Institute, where he later lectured. He went on to work as a well-known illustrator for the Saturday Evening Post and other national corporations and spent 20 years of his life as an artist and illustrator for the famed General Electric company. He created art in many mediums from watercolor to oil to pen and ink. Gould preferred to depict historical sites such as the Statue of Liberty or scenes from the Hudson River Valley, although his subjects varied widely. The collection will be on display and open to our students, staff, and faculty, as well as the public, until the end of May 2024.

REPORT FROM THE ADVENTIST DIGITAL LIBRARY AND SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST PERIODICAL & OBITUARY INDEX

By Katharine Van Arsdale

In June 2023, the Seventh-day Adventist Periodical & Obituary Index (SDAPI) launched its new website on the Adventist Digital Library (ADL) platform. This move signals a new era for SDAPI, which began in the 1970s as a print index of articles published in Adventist English-language periodicals. On the ADL platform, SDAPI gains features that transform the index into a true database of Adventist articles, both popular and scholarly. Features include advanced and faceted search, peer review filters, a citation export widget, and the addition of keyword searchable full text article PDFs. From May 2023 to the present, all article citations now include the article PDF, where publishers grant permission or make their periodicals publicly available. Articles are also being appended to previously indexed citations. As a result, the complete run of the Journal of Adventist Education is now available through SDAPI; other titles are underway.

The Adventist Digital Library's new library site is available in beta with plans to fully launch in 2024. Over 40,000 works are available on the new ADL as of March 2024, with over 70,000 additional works in the queue. New material loads every day to the beta site, and incoming additions include much sought after collections such as Oakwood University's Eva B. Dykes Collection and periodicals including Insight, Youth's Instructor, and Signs of the Times. Many never-before-digitized periodicals have been recently scanned and processed by ADL from the library holdings of Atlantic Union College. Meanwhile, the legacy ADL site continues to serve researchers while content loads into the new ADL.

In 2023, ADL launched two new features for partners: on-site digitization services and fully hosted institutional repositories for subscribing colleges and universities. AdventHealth University, the Center for Adventist Research at Andrews University, Union Adventist University, Walla Walla University, and Washington Adventist University have now launched sites through their partnerships with ADL. Other institutions are invited to inquire about this feature.

Feedback, questions, or comments are welcome. Please write to content@adventistdigitallibrary.org.
